

ID Logistics gains a place on the HappyAtWork podium!

Cavaillon, 21 June 2017 – Following a participation-based survey of its employees, ID Logistics has secured HappyAtWork 2017 accreditation, the first participation-based employer certification rewarding excellence in employee management and motivation.

To achieve HappyAtWork certification, employers are assessed on six criteria – professional development, stimulating environment, management and motivation, salary and rewards, and, lastly, pride and pleasure. All in all, over 5,000 organisations have been assessed by their teams through internal surveys, and on the meilleures-entreprises.com website.

ID Logistics' employees gave it a score of 4.11 out of 5, ranking the Group third among businesses with over 1,000 employees.

Christophe Satin, Chief Operating Officer of ID Logistics, commented: "We are proud to have gained HappyAtWork certification. I would like to thank all our teams who took part in the survey and congratulate our managers on their unstinting efforts to integrate, guide, support, develop and nurture our talent. With creativity and pragmatism, our teams are helping to build ID Logistics' brand as an employer. This accreditation is just reward for our high-quality approach in a sector requiring exacting standards of service."

Emmanuel Vexlard, Chief Executive Officer of ID Logistics France, added: "In 16 years, ID Logistics has grown to become an international Group with 18,500 staff serving top-tier clients. This success demonstrates the wisdom of our strategy and the strength of our values. We need to continue developing our talent internally, attracting the best people from outside and building teams and processes to put clients and their expectations at the centre of everything we do. This award is the first step towards our goal of being seen by our clients as a partner that creates value with expert teams that really make a difference."
